The duration of PhD studies can be three (3) years the minimum and six (6) years the maximum since the date the PhD candidate's three-member Advisory Committee has been appointed.

The General Assembly of the Department allocates per category of applications, and based on the research subject, a corresponding three-member Evaluation Committee of Faculty members to evaluate the PhD applications and to decide if a candidate is interviewed. The committee then submits an analytic memorandum to the General Assembly of the Department explaining the reasons why each candidate should or should not be accepted, the courses in which the PhD candidate should be examined if accepted, as well the name of a potential supervisor, in case he/she has not been suggested by the applicant. The General Assembly of the Department gets the opinion of the proposed supervisor and co-evaluates it with the committee's memorandum and then approves or declines the candidate's application. Those who are accepted acquire the status of I PhD Candidate and are registered in the Department's registry.

The Doctoral Studies Program, with the aim of providing the PhD candidate the scientific background required for their research and its connection with the scientific subjects treated by the Department of Economics, includes the successful examination in a cycle of four (4) advanced courses. The above three-member committees that examine the applications, simultaneously with the acceptance of a PhD candidate, choose the above advanced courses and recommend this choice to the General Assembly, while in addition it is possible to propose to the General Assembly to ask him/her to be successfully examined, in the number of compulsory courses offered by the MSc Program in Economics. Also, the three-member committees recommend the time structure of the program of the aforementioned courses, which, however, takes place in a period of no longer than three (3) academic semesters from the date of registration of the PhD Candidate. It is also possible to recommend the exemption, in whole or in part, from the obligation to examine the PhD Candidate in the above courses (for more details see Article 7 and the Appendix of the Doctoral Studies Regulations).
